A Brief History of Hymn 436, I Bind Unto Myself Today

Tradition attributes this hymn to St. Patrick (389-461?). Legend states that Patrick and his company were threatened by the king and Druidic priests. Patrick sang this hymn in response. Though it may actually date from the 8th century, the text first appears in two Irish manuscripts of the 11th century. Known as “St Patrick’s Breast plate”, it is a breastplate of faith for the protection of body and soul against demons, men, and vices. The English paraphrase was written by Cecil Frances Alexander (1818-95), a well-known writer of children’s hymns’ and wife of William Alexander (Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of Ireland). The English version was written for St. Patrick’s Day, 1889; and it was sung throughout Ireland on that date.
